Examples of portfolio distribution

● Conservative portfolio

A conservative portfolio is for clients who prioritize lower returns over the risk of fluctuations. Thanks to a 20% investment in PBX, the client earns 1.21% from Earnio. However, it is ideal for clients who want to get a feel for investing in digital assets.

An investment of 80,000 EUR will yield a return of more than 43.2% over three years raising the initial allocation to around 114,000 EUR. With the estimate of PBX tripling in price from 20,000 to 60,000 EUR, the overall investment would grow to 174,000 EUR which represents a 74% return over 3 years.

● Moderate portfolio

The moderately dynamic option is for clients who understand the benefits of PBX both in terms of potential appreciation and its impact on the percentage return from Earnio. With an investment of 45,000 EUR in PBX, the client earns 1.42% per month from their investment in Earnio.

This means the client will see an increase of 51.1% over 3 years, from the initial 55,000 to more than 83,000 EUR. Together with PBX tripled in price from 45,000 to 135,000 EUR, the total investment would amount to 218,000 EUR, which represents 118% return in 3 years.

● Dynamic portfolio

This portfolio option is for those who have understood the vision of Probinex. A larger portion of the investment consists of PBX, specifically 70%, with 30% going into Earnio, which is a more conservative complement. The client is taking on greater risk here, but greater risk can be rewarded with higher returns.

While 70,000 EUR in PBX could triple in three years to 210,000 EUR, it also secures the 1.42% appreciation in Earnio. The investment of 30,000 EUR will amount to 45,000 EUR. In total, the client would earn 255,000 EUR, which represents 155% return in 3 years.

The returns from Earnio are based on a fixed rate. Projections for PBX are derived from past performance with slightly conservative estimates. However, past performance does not guarantee future results, and actual returns may vary.
